You know what I like about Vermont? Or the Earth in general? The green tree's that make it easier to breath, the flowing water, the blue sky, and the clean air. But sadly, all of that is slowly going away.

It isn't by some supervillain who try's to pollute the earth, It's by me, and you, and every single human on earth. The earth is practically melting, because of me, and you. Isn't that sad? Luckily, some states are trying to reduce there carbon footprint, composting, a day dedicated to picking up trash, and more! I really hope it's enough though. I hope that I can still be able to breath in clean air 50 years in the future. I hope I can still see a clean blue sky in the future too. I hope for a better future where we don't live on a dying planet.

Luckily, we might still have a chance by reducing our carbon footprint. Picking up trash, using reusable bags, reducing, reusing, and recycling, and more! Let's make a better future, together.
