The Earth Day

Do you think Earth Day is important to the environment? Do you think Earth Day is important to you?

I enjoy Vermont's environment by playing soccer and riding my bike. While I'm doing all that I am taking in all the fresh clean air I feel we don't really get time to just take a minute to stop and breathe in the clean air we have right here in Vermont. Also I like to go on hikes with my family. It's really fun just to spend time with your family. Some people don't get time to spend with their families because they might be working at their job or just helping around the house.

Earth day is a day of planting trees and a day to help clean up our world. We need to stop polluting all around the world. The pollution is getting into the oceans, and it's really dreadful for the animals that live in the ocean. Earth day means we have to recycle. We recycle plastic bottles, plastic containers and other plastic things. When we recycle we help save the animals in the ocean who are dealing with pollution. That's why we need to be recycling to save our ocean friends!

I love Vermont's environment. The clean air you smell is delightful and you can breathe it too. If it's really hot outside, and there's not a calm fresh breeze going through your hair, you can grab a fan or go inside for air conditioning. In the spring time there's mostly a nice calm breeze.

What I care most about the environment is the animals. The precious little animals out there in the big wide open world, they have to be saved.

They matter because one day they could be swimming in the ocean when all the pollution comes around. They could get caught in it and their little fins could get caught in it. They could be scratched badly and that's not good for animals. That's why Earth Day is a good day. Earth day is right around the corner. That's why we need to recycle to save the animals in the ocean!
