Nature, Animals and the Environment

Did you ever walk in the woods picking up trash? If you haven't I would suggest you do. Once I was picking up trash I picked up a heavy can and dumped the stuff out of it. It was still heavy so I kept shaking it. A family of mice was in the can and they were dead. I was shocked and saddened.

So does this mean that if there's trash on the road and in the oceans then more animals will die?! I found a whole family of mice in one can. I mean come on, that is too many mice. What would the world be like with no trash? It probably would be a dream come true. Animals having a happy life, humans staying alive longer. If we start cleaning our planet and stop killing living things, we would have a better life. You're probably saying, "Oh how could we change the world with only one writing piece that's only in Vermont?" I say we can spread the news on any social media! Just think people stop killing animals, of course we will still need to kill animals, to feed ourselves or keep animals from over running the population but still!

If we can clean the ocean or land, we can save our planet. Have you ever heard of Green Up Day? Well it's a day where you go outside and clean up trash on the side of the road or anywhere that has trash in Vermont. What if we did that at least three times a week, three out of seven days a week it's not a lot. Even in 2022 where covid is still alive we can still help our planet, instead of making it worse, you can make it better.

Okay here are the rules: if you see an animal in danger you save it, if you see trash anywhere outside while you're walking pick it up. It's literally that easy, well if it's a dangerous animal leave that to the police, animal control, or game warden. On Saturday March 26th 2022 I was sitting in my room talking on the phone with my friends when there was a big bang! Sadly there was a bird that ran into our house and broke its neck. The bird sadly died, so what does this mean? Does it mean our houses are dangerous too?

What happens if everything becomes dangerous to living things? Would we make it safer or more dangerous? I mean in the winter a lot of people have a wood stove to keep warm but that would mean we're killing trees to keep us alive. Why do people care about being so worried about burning trees you may ask? Well it also means less air for us to breathe and so if you keep killing trees we will keep dying. So try to use burnible stuff like cardboard boxes and paper.

Y'all know how birds can't see windows right? Did you know that up to one billion birds die from running into windows? I DIDN'T EVEN KNOW THAT! So I have an idea why don't we put stuff on the windows so birds can see the windows then less birds will die? There—problem solved. Now let's talk about the ocean, the ocean is a beautiful place. But if we keep throwing trash in it all the fish will die. You don't want that do you? One thing people can do is... throw trash in the trash bin! Now the water will be better. In conclusion the world is being destroyed by us and we have to stop! So what will you do to help the Earth? Will you be a jerk and keep destroying our planet or will you help save it?
