Hello, I love living in Vermont. You should visit sometime, it's really nice and beautiful here. I am going to talk about a few things about Vermont and Earth day, like what I love about Vermont, how we can help the environment, how I enjoy Vermont, what I care most about Vermont, and my concerns about Vermont's environment..

One thing I love about Vermont is the mountains. We have a lot of mountains. It is really cool when there is snow at the tippy top. Our state song is called These Green Hills. Our state is even called the Green Mountain state. There is a mountain called Jay Peak that has a ski resort and a water park. Mount Mansfield is the tallest mountain here, in Vermont.

Earth day means a day to help the environment around me and the animals who live there. A few ways we can help the environment is by picking up trash and telling people to recycle. A few other ways we can help the environment by using less electricity and trying to use the car the least you can, NOT burn trash, use 4-stroke engines instead of 2-stroke engines on machines like lawn mowers, snowmobiles, ect, and purchase no-spill gas cans. Some ways to celebrate Earth Day are to make a bird feeder, grow something, and create a recycling bin

I enjoy Vermont's environment by playing outside. It's fun, in summer, running around in the sun, sometimes there's a nice cool breeze blowing. In the winter, it's fun making snow angels and building snowmen. In autumn, it's such fun jumping in the piles of leaves that fall from the trees and we rake up into piles. In spring, I like sniffing the flowers. The roses smell especially sweet, as long as you don't get pricked by the thorns.

What I care most about the environment is the trees and bushes because they give us air and they give animals food. They also make Vermont pretty. In the fall all the leaves on the trees turn a delightful red, orange and yellow. Covering all the trees, they look so lovely. Even though in winter all the trees are bare except evergreens, there is snow and icicles shimmering and shining on the trees. In the springtime, some trees have pretty pink or white blossoms. The trees are thick with green leaves in the summer.

I have a couple concerns about Vermont's environment. One concern is litter. I have seen trash around my house, in the woods. Animals might eat the trash and get sick. The litter could get stuck on trees and plants. The waste could cover the environment and kill trees, bushes, flowers, and animals. It could fill up the lakes so animals barely get enough water, frogs, tadpoles, and frog and fish eggs get poisoned, and fish can't breathe. My other concern is climate change. Lately Vermont has been getting warmer and wetter. We are getting a shorter winter and less snow every year. Last year there was not even any snow on Christmas!! Less winter means that there is less time for skiing and snowboarding. Our summers are getting hotter and drier. Water bodies are thawing sooner each spring.

I hope you liked this informative letter about Vermont and Earth day and I hope you find time to visit our green mountain state, Vermont!
