Vermont is a beautiful place. It is warm but sometimes cold and that's one of the things I like most about Vermont. When it's spring or summer you can skateboard and go to the beach, in fall you jump into leaves and look at the leaves fall, in winter you can sled and go snowboarding, skiing, and snowmobiling. In summer I love to just go outside and hangout with my friends. In winter I go sledding with my sister. In fall is when I jump in leaves. In spring I have picnics with my nana. Another thing I like about Vermont is the animals and the beautiful landscape with the mountains and ponds.

This is where I grew up so it would be weird to leave. I am used to a small place without a lot of people, I am used to a bunch of lakes and all the mountains. I've never been in an earthquake or the floods, I've never been near an erupting volcano or any of that. I wouldn't have any idea of what to do.

I love Vermont because of its maple syrup. Maple syrup is good on a lot of things like waffles, pancakes, snow, french toast, ice cream, ect. I love maple candy but I don't like maple leaf candy. I think that the candy is way too sweet, but I don't know if that makes a lot of sense because my favorite 'maple candy' is sugar on snow.

The best thing about Vermont is that it has great food. Even though a lot of the food doesn't originate from Vermont we still eat it here. A lot of people here eat mac and cheese but that didn't originate from here. There is also poutine and apple pie.
